Response to Defendants' Supplemental Authority

The Court should disregard the supplemental authority submitted by Defendants as the order of the Michigan Court of Appeals is not relevant to the dispute pending before this Court. First, the ruling is an order and not an opinion. The order contains no details with respect to the order issued nor the basis on which it was issued. What is apparent from generally available sources shows that the dispute arises out of the Oakland County Michigan Probate Court and relates to the appointment of a guardian. A legitimate news organization had been reporting on the dispute. As best can be determined from the order of the Court of Appeals, the injunction related to publication of photographs or video recordings of individuals. But no party alleged that the news organization had engaged in unlawful trespass or invasion of private spaces or that the photographs had been taken or video recorded through unlawful surveillance.

Second, the case is irrelevant to this dispute because it does not consider or relate to the theft of trade secrets or recordings obtained through unlawful eavesdropping. Rather, the situation appears to involve ordinary news reporting of a probate matter that has been underway for nearly a decade. The merits of the dispute are not explained in the records of the Probate Court (docket attached) or by the decision of the Court of Appeals.

Defendants have done no more than present the Court with a decision, barren of facts, which does not guide the Court or the parties. The Court has been provided with authority which is directly relevant to this dispute and the order of the Court of Appeals does not diminish the significance of these decisions Ford Motor Co. v. Lane, 67 F.Supp.2d 745 (E.D.Mich.,1999). (“...an injunction may issue against one who plans to reveal a trade secret in violation of an employment contract or in breach of a fiduciary duty.”); Chrysler Corp. v. Sheridan, 2003 WL 327714, at *5 (2003) (Michigan’s enactment of the Uniform Trade Secrets Act, M.C.L...provides that a court may enjoin an employee from disseminating trade secrets.”).

The Court should disregard the supplemental authority as irrelevant.
